Editor's Note

In the name of Truth and Justice, all original name suffixes have been retained in OURLYON: CLAMP School Defenders. "Name suffixes?" you ask? In the Japanese language there are a number of suffixes (also called honorifics) that come after the name which indicate the nature of the relationship between two people. Whether a character is called Tokash-sama or Tokash-kun means a great deal in how that character is perceived by the speaker. Here's a brief listing of name suffixes and when they are used:

-kun—Indicates friendly familiarity with someone on the same level or younger. It is usually used with boys, but is sometimes used with girls or adults (such as a boss to employees or teacher to class students).

-chan—The female equivalent of -kun. It usually refers to girls, but can be applied to boys or adults in some cases.

-san—Indicates respect. -san is the most common suffix and is used among peers who are not on an intimate level. It's the equivalent of Mr. and Ms.

-sama—Indicates a great level of respect or admiration and is used towards someone much older or of higher standing. Most people use -sama with Noboru because he comes from an aristocratic family.

-sensei—The term for appendicesman. It can also be used for someone in an organization who has more experience.

-sensei—The term for teacher. It can also apply to someone who is a mentor figure or a master of a trade.

-jo—A formal way of addressing young girls of high standing, like Utako. Equivalent to Miss.

-koi—The equivalent of -jo used for young women. Equivalent to Ma.

If two people are good friends, they might agree not to use honorifics with each other, as is the case when Tokash. If a person wishes to show respect, he or she might address someone by their formal name, as the younger students do in Chapter 8.

But enough of this boring stuff—you're here to read about those champions of justice, the CLAMP School Defenders! We hope you find that retaining the name suffixes adds to your enjoyment of OURLYON. If you like reading your manga this way and would like to see suffixes in other TOKYOPOP series... or if you find it distracting or confusing, let us know! Send your comments to editor@tokyopop.com.

The CLAMP School Foundation

Classes ranging from Kindergarten to Graduate studies are held here in a completely enclosed educational system.

Counting students, workers, and other affiliates and their families—over 10,000 people live, work and study in the CLAMP community.

100% privately funded, the school forms its own insular functioning society. It features living quarters, laboratories, medical centers, hospitals, banks and various other facilities.

CLAMP School has an enormous campus. Divided into six zones, contains Kindergarten, Elementary, Junior High, High School, University and Graduate Studies.

Japan's largest zaibatsu, the Iwasawaya family, built this school with the supreme goal of using it to groom future generations.

HOWEVER, WHERE THAT MANY PEOPLE GATHER,
TROUBLE USUALLY FOLLOWS...

Given the volume of brilliant and eccentric minds housed in this community, security is of utmost importance. As a result, the school founders established
a secret organization.

A unit to solve all problems quickly and quietly, and to maintain peace—
a do-nothing unit. If you will.

This, in short, is the CLAMP School Defenders.

Or more commonly known as DUKLYON!

A black and white manga-style illustration of two mecha robots. The robot in the foreground is a large, bipedal mecha with a helmeted head, a large chest plate, and a prominent circular sensor on its chest. It has a determined, slightly aggressive expression. The robot in the background is smaller, more compact, and also helmeted, with a similar but more streamlined design. Both robots are posed dynamically, with the background robot appearing to be in a leaping or attacking stance. The background consists of sharp, radiating lines, suggesting a high-speed action scene or a dramatic reveal. The overall style is detailed and characteristic of mecha anime art.
